

Maximizing Collections Funds

Using Free and Currently Owned Tools to Assess the Strength and Needs of Special Collections.

Amanda Tiller-Hackett
Humanities Collection Development Librarian, MUN

Question?

“I’ve determined that the best way to spend my subject funds is to concentrate on strengthening weaker areas, and maintaining the strength of stronger areas. With this in mind...

How do I know how strong the collections in my subject areas really are?”

1 possible answer...

Find ways to assess the relative strength of my collections by performing overlap analyses with other similar library collections!

Selected Subject Area for Comparison

Start “small”:

Postcolonial Literature

(hereafter called PC literature)

PC Literature (Definition):

“A body of literary writing that responds to the intellectual discourse of European colonization in Asia, Africa, Middle East, the Pacific and elsewhere. Postcolonial literature addresses the problems and consequences of the decolonization of a country and of a nation, especially the political and cultural independence of formerly subjugated colonial peoples; it also covers literary critiques of and about postcolonial literature, the undertones of which carry, communicate, and justify racialism and colonialism. But most contemporary forms of postcolonial literature present literary and intellectual critiques of the postcolonial discourse by endeavouring to assimilate postcolonialism and its literary expressions.” (Wikipedia...yes, that’s right. Wikipedia).

Themes (http://humanities.wisc.edu/assets/misc/What_is_Postcolonial_Literature_.pdf):

- Reclaiming Spaces and Places
- Asserting Cultural Integrity
- Revising History

Characteristics:

- Resistant Descriptions
- Appropriation of the Colonizers’ Language
- Reworking Colonial Artforms

PC Studies at MUN (English dept.)

- 6 regular faculty working in this area;
- “Colonial and Postcolonial Studies in the English department at Memorial engage a number of different trajectories related to British Imperialism and its cultural and environmental aftereffects. Our faculty work on projects that investigate questions such as: what happens when cultures collide? What is a hybrid identity? What is the nature of Colonial and Postcolonial violence? How important is a sense of home? How do nations imagine themselves? In what ways do the consequences of imperialism linger across generations and in various environments and ecocultures?”

Comparison Libraries/ Institutions

1. University of Calgary:
 - a. English Department has a Postcolonial Research Group
 - b. Postcolonial Studies is an area of extensive research interest.
 - c. 7 regular faculty members in the department of English work in the area of Postcolonial Studies.

Comparison Libraries/ Institutions (Cont'd)

2. York:

- a. “York’s (Graduate Program in English) is one of Canada’s key literary faculties in Postcolonial Studies.”
- b. “York’s world-renowned faculty maintain their cutting edge research into and teaching of the literatures of Postcoloniality, the writings of diasporic and indigenous peoples and communities, theories of Imperialism and its resistance, and globalization studies.”

Comparison Libraries/ Institutions (Cont'd)

3. University of Guelph:

a. PC Studies listed among the strengths of the English & Theatre Studies graduate (MA) program.

b. 4 regular faculty members devoted to research and teaching in PC studies.

Gobi Comparison Options:

1. Peer Comparison Titles:
