MANDATE

We care about stuff like memory/transparency/access/preservation
Why should we care about web content?

The archivist, then, has a unique opportunity in the future if he addresses himself to this vital task of information retrieval, in both the field of historical and modern records. His resources will span the present and the past, and he will hold the key to decision-making and research alike. His bank of interest will be far wider than that of the records manager, but he must learn the language of the computer like his native tongue if he is not to be relegated to the fringe of administration from which he came. We must not be seduced by a kind of academic dolce vita or we will surely die as archivists and will fail to ensure for the future the continuation of that record which has, by so much effort, been saved from the past.

Hugh A. Taylor, "Information Retrieval and the Training of the Archivist". The Canadian Archivist. 2:3 (1972): 33.

“Our job is to serve the government and the ministers that we report to...

Our job is to keep the institution relevant and to keep it focused on a path where it can still continue to deliver its mandate [with] fewer resources.

The minute we become activists we’re going to lose our judgment and our perspective on how to do that.”

Cecelia Muir, COO of LAC, responding to question about lack of advocacy by LAC leadership regarding cuts in 2012.

"For archivists to abstain from cultural awareness and criticism is tantamount to professional irresponsibility."
